Family Friendly Walk Through Report

August 2012

Introduction

What is a Family Friendly Walk Through?

The purpose of the Family Friendly Walk Through (FFWT) is to assess how welcome families are in your school and how welcome families are in the learning process. CAFÉ staff members completed a FFWT of your school on May 7th, 2012. The FFWT included: (1) a physical walk through; (2) a review of printed material; (3) a review of the school’s web site; (4) a “shopper call;” (5) an interview the building administrator; (6) a survey of school staff; and (7) a survey of parents.

This FFWT report is designed to help your school have a richer conversation about how welcome families are in your school and how welcome families are in the learning process. School Visit Highlights

- The Thomas Paine school campus is well maintained. It is clear that Thomas Paine staff and administration take pride in the physical appearance of the building and grounds. Feedback from both parents and teachers indicates that Thomas Paine is successful at providing parents with information and social and celebratory experiences. Thomas Paine Elementary is very successful at involving parents in the school.

Recommended Next Steps

To take your family engagement practice from involving parents in the school to engaging parents in student learning, CAFÉ recommends the following:

- Structured professional development for all staff (certified and non-certified) that helps staff members understand:
 - Why family engagement matters and how family engagement efforts can positively influence student learning;
 - What specific practices affect student academic progress; and
 - How Thomas Paine Elementary can create a school-wide culture which promotes a range of family engagement practices and strategies that are student-centered and designed to improve learning.
- Provide a school-wide definition of parental involvement with input from administration, staff and families. This facilitates an awareness, which often translates into action to merge student learning with parent involvement. Promote this definition to staff and families at every opportunity much like you would a mission statement, (i.e., school-to-home communications, newsletters, staff meetings, website, etc.)
- Adopt multiple practices that help all parents feel welcome to participate in their child's learning as a member of the education team.
- Create explicit, positive school assumptions about the importance of parent contributions to student success, and communicate that all parents, regardless of education level, can support student success.

- Give parents specific information on their child's academic performance and teach how to interpret this data in the context of overall classroom performance, school benchmarks, and state standards.
- Establish a parent involvement action team comprised of parents, staff, and administrators to implement ongoing strategies for the purpose of motivating parents to participate in student learning.

Welcoming

Your Score

Definition	Score	Rating
Procedures are in place to accommodate parent visits to the school	1.60	Low
School personnel help parents to feel comfortable	2.40	Emerging
Parents' culture and language are respected	1.94	Low
The school is physically attractive	2.00	Emerging
Overall Score	1.99	Low

Commendations

- Campus is well maintained and there is an adhered to visitor policy upon entering the campus.
- Families feel extremely comfortable communicating with their child's teacher and feel that school personnel are friendly when they visit the campus. They also feel that their culture, ethnicity and religion are respected.
- Principal's honest dialogue during interview and her eagerness to learn and implement effective strategies.

Recommendations

- Display a campus map and have handouts of the map readily available for families and visitors.
- Greet visitors to the school by displaying welcome signs at school entrance and/or other visibly prominent locations in language(s) representative of the school population. These welcome signs can also serve as a designation to main entrances to school campus. The photo here shows that Paine does an excellent job with signage for the PBIS initiative. Consider using the effective signage strategies from the PBIS program for parent engagement activities. The tone of the sign in the second photo does not convey a welcoming message.

- The school parking lot is often a families’/visitor’s first impression of the school’s climate. Provide directional signs for entrance/exit and flow of traffic within the parking area and designate a few spots as “Family/Visitor” parking to reinforce the message that the school welcomes and has a place for visitors.
- Customer service is an integral component of creating a climate that welcomes all families. Provide yearly staff development opportunities in this area and regularly communicate specific “customer service expectations” to ensure that front line staff have the knowledge and resources to provide quality service at all times.
- While maintaining a safe campus is paramount, ensure that families always feel that the campus door is open to a family partnership.
- Provide a school-wide definition of parental involvement with input from administration and staff. This serves to create an awareness, which often develops into merging student learning with parent involvement. Promote this definition to staff and families at every opportunity much like you would a mission statement, (i.e., school-to-home communications, newsletters, staff meetings, website, etc.).
- While families overwhelmingly felt that their religion, culture and ethnicity were respected and represented, school administration felt they could do a better job addressing this issue on a consistent basis. We recommend hosting a Family Cultural Night and creating social networking opportunities for families and students to share their heritage with one another and the entire school community. We also recommend visibly celebrating the school’s diversity in the way of posting art, literature, posters, etc. throughout the hallways and common areas of campus.
- The photo here shows a bulletin board that highlights volunteers. While it is ok to have a bulletin board highlighting general topics, most displays should focus on student learning. When looking at displays of student learning, make sure to be clear about what the students were working on, how it is connected to the curriculum, which standard it is aligned with, and how parents can talk with their child about the learning that took place. To connect and include families in student achievement, we suggest displaying more direct evidence of learning throughout the campus. This is the difference between displaying student work and showcasing evidence of learning or other general topics.
- To maintain quality customer service, administration should regularly communicate specific “customer service expectations” to staff and encourage staff development opportunities in this area.

Communication

Your Score

Definition	Score	Rating
Contact between schools and families is frequent, comfortable, and two-way	2.58	Emerging
Written and oral communication is clear and comprehensible	2.89	High
Meetings and events are scheduled regularly, widely advertised, and well attended	1.00	Low
Print information is available, attractive, useful, and family/culturally friendly	2.75	High
Overall Score	2.31	Emerging

Commendations

- Parents overwhelmingly praise Thomas Paine for their communication practices. Parents indicated on survey responses that they receive positive comments from teachers, can easily reach school personnel when needed and that school personnel respond to parent concerns in a timely manner.

Recommendations

- Consider incorporating the use of a suggestion box or other informal method to solicit family input on procedures, policies, concerns, and/or school achievement progress. In order to promote the importance of parent feedback, pair the use of a suggestion box with an explanation of the school's interest in obtaining parent feedback and provide information to parents on the topics for which the school would like their feedback. Posing specific questions or issues for response in the school newsletter, on the school website or during a parent meeting may serve to encourage parent participation.
- To promote your school's parent/teacher organization, consider creating a bulletin board in the front of the school and on your website to visibly promote this organization, recruit new members and update families on recent activity. Make sure to label the board as a "PTO/PTA Bulletin Board" so that families know where in the school and on the website to locate information. Suggested content for the board may include the following; meeting minutes, upcoming events, membership and contact information. Ensure that material and content is updated on a regular basis.
- When possible, ensure all written communications (fliers, newsletters) are in predominant languages spoken by families and are free of jargon and acronyms.
- Provide a prominent area in the school where parent organizations and school staff may post announcements and upcoming events.
- Administration should consistently provide formal and in-formal opportunities to meet with families so they are included in, and aware of school-wide issues.

Information

Your Score

Definition	Score	Rating
The school provides resources and materials to help families learn about school goals, policies, and procedures	1.53	Low
The school has programs and procedures to inform families about their child’s classroom and activities	1.67	Low
Families are kept current on their child’s school performance	2.43	Emerging
The school has programs and procedures to involve parents with their child’s academic achievement	2.12	Emerging
The school has programs and procedures to inform families about available community assistance	2.09	Emerging
Overall Score	1.97	Low

Commendations

- Families are informed about their child’s performance in school and educators elicit information from families about their child’s strengths, talents, interests and needs.

Recommendations

- Consider enhancing the content of your current welcome folder to include a welcome letter from the principal, student handbook, information about instructional programs, information about parent organizations and volunteer opportunities, staff contact information, and specific school highlights such as awards, athletics, community partnerships and school academic performance information. The focus of the packet should be on families and their role in the school and in supporting learning.
- Consider providing a prominent area of the school where families can access information on school policies and procedures, instructional practices, curriculum information, tutoring assistance, volunteer opportunities and community resources. To inform parents of the availability and location of this information area, identify the area with signage such as “Parent Information Board” and promote it in school newsletters, on website, and school events. For families that do not frequent the campus, ensure this information is easily found on the school website and individual teacher web pages. When updating families about new procedures or policies, consider sending those documents home on bright colored paper or utilize social networking options such as Facebook, Twitter or text messaging.
- Display school mission statement in a prominent area where families and visitors frequent. This helps to communicate the school’s goals and fundamental purpose. Incorporate the mission statement in school correspondence and meetings to remind staff, students and families of this commitment.
- Many educators indicate that they do not provide newsletters/class bulletins to families. Encourage all educators to do so on a monthly or quarterly basis, with information on class assignments, upcoming events, etc. Utilize technology and social media to easily communicate with families on a regular basis.
- To keep family informed and connected to student progress, consider updating your current quarterly progress report to include information on how family members can support student learning at home, based on individual student data. These “Data Tracker” guide reports should be updated with individual student progress, provided to families on a quarterly basis, paired with a curriculum outline to keep family members informed on what students are learning in class and include at-home learning strategies.

- Various educators responded that they do not frequently communicate to families when a student shows improvement or does something well. Encouraging a practice in which educators consistently communicate with families regarding the status of a student's improvement will strengthen communication channels and establish effective partnerships with parents that support student learning. Utilize these communications to aid parents in understanding academic standards, assessment data and evaluation tools including progress reports and report cards.
- To keep parents connected with student learning, consider enhancing or including the following content on your website:
 - Parent Resource section including information on upcoming events/parent workshops, resources for families (educational and community) and strategies to connect families to student learning
 - Individual classroom or subject area information - To establish consistency among teacher web pages ensure that all teachers, at minimum, post a short bio, include information on yearly student learning objectives, homework assignments, ways for parents to be active participants in their child's education and current newsletters. For accountability, review these pages on a consistent basis.
 - Curriculum Information
 - On-line grade review
 - School Key Term Guide
 - School or district newsletter
 - School location and link to mapping program
 - Frequently Asked Question section on:
 - School office hours and student hours
 - Volunteer opportunities
 - Who to contact in the office
 - What to do if a child will be late or absent
 - Bus information
 - Homework expectations
 - School dress code
 - Behavior expectations/what not to bring to school
 - Enrollment requirements
- Creatively look at ways to designate space on your campus for a Parent Resource Center or area in the school where parents are able to get information on helping their child learn, academic tips, DVD's, access to a computer, or other materials that support student learning. We understand that designating space on campus for a center may be difficult. Consider designating a corner of your media center or front office space to house parent materials and a computer for family or visitor use.
- Parent surveys indicate a need to provide more information to families regarding student learning and how to provide support for learning at home. To foster parent partnerships and facilitate two-way conversation regarding student achievement, provide on-site and online opportunities that explain to families how to support learning at home. Encourage educators to outline strategies for promoting learning at home on their classroom web page, in school-home correspondences, and during parent-teacher conferences. To assist with learning at home strategies, encourage educators to discuss the individual learning style of students with parents, and send home student work for parent review and comment.
- To facilitate school transitions ensure families are provided opportunities to participate in meetings, activities, and orientations. Have your parent teacher organization work with staff and school administration to organize transition meetings for families that explain school policies and procedures, academic standards, report cards, and specific ways that families can assist with student learning.
- To direct families to needed resources, encourage teachers to have a list of important community numbers (tutoring and homework assistance, counseling services and social and financial assistance) readily available for parents.

Participation

Your Score

Definition	Score	Rating
Individuals and existing documents support parent input and ideas	1.97	Low
Parents and teachers meet and work together	2.00	Emerging
Schools provide parents with education and volunteering options	1.50	Low
Parents are valued as an education community resource	1.64	Low
Overall Score	1.78	Low

Commendations

- Teachers elicit information from parents about their child’s strengths, talents, interests and needs.

Recommendations

- Provide various opportunities and different levels of engagement for parents who are at different stages of parent involvement. To ensure a variety of parents are involved in school decision-making committees, consider adopting a 1-2 year term limit on school committees/boards. Invite parent representatives from each grade level to participate and/or serve as “parent leaders” to help support and recruit other parents.
- Many educators responded that they don’t regularly attend family events at the school. Encourage staff participation at events to demonstrate a sincere interest in school-family partnerships and provide opportunities for teachers, parents and community members to interact in smaller groups, and encourage processes for direct and positive contact.
- Educators reported that the majority of parents do not attend meetings or regularly scheduled school events. However, the majority of parents surveyed responded that they attend school events, meetings, conferences, etc. To facilitate partnership and address the disconnect, provide opportunities for teachers and parents to interact in smaller groups, and encourage processes for direct and positive contact. Additional recommendations to encourage family attendance at meetings and events are: utilize parent event punch cards, host lunch and learns, extend personal and print invitations and hold events outside of school.
- Some parents do not feel they are well informed about parent organizations (PTO/PTA). Designate an area in the school for parent organizations that can be used for recruitment and to post event information. This can also be extended to the school website and newsletter.
- To promote successful family and community engagement practices in your school and district, we recommend adding a family engagement professional development track to your current offerings that will include training on how to communicate with families, asset building, cultural competency and community mapping.
- Have a plan in place to monitor school/parent initiatives for the purpose of improving school and parent partnerships, including evaluations and/or surveys at parent workshops, events, and meetings.
- Consider forming a Family Involvement Action Team comprised of parents, staff, administrators, and community members to assess, plan, and implement on-going strategies for the purpose of increasing parent involvement.
- Survey families, mentors, and community members on their talents and skills and provide various opportunities for volunteering that match their interests and different levels of engagement. This “survey” can be done the traditional route, be posted on your website, or be conducted in an informal way every time a family member is on campus or when teachers call home. When possible, invite parents, mentors and community members into the classroom to share their expertise and experience (cultural or technical background) with students.

- To maximize parent participation, involve parents in recruiting others. To cultivate a positive “word of mouth campaign”, ensure to create positive relationships with every family member you connect with as they will be sure to spread the news about the wonderful opportunities available at the school.
- Ensure that parents have access to the school Parent Involvement Policy and information on Title I. Post this information on the school website, in the Welcome Folder and in the student handbook. It is important that these documents are readily available for families and utilized to reinforce Thomas Paine’s commitment to engaging families in student learning.
- Look for creative ways to provide educational resources and education to families on school campus (i.e. language, computer, parenting classes, workshops). Establishing partnerships with community organization and institutes of higher learning can assist with accomplishing this.
- To maximize parent participation ensure accommodations for family involvement such as transportation, childcare and translation are always provided. Advertise the availability of these services when promoting events to families.
